But Six Months After the War. To the Editor of the Evening Post: Sir:—In November, 1865, I was on a Pennsylvania railroad train, east-bound from Pittsburg. In the next seat was an old fellow—that's the way you would describe him-with "country" written all over him. He opened try" written all over him. He opened a conversation with our party, and asked if we were going to Washington; said he was going there; and added, with pauses, "I've got a son in Washington—General Grant." Of course, the response was "Indeed," etc.; and so, feeling encouraged, he turned about with his arm over the back of the seat and proceeded to "tell all about" his son.

I remember it all as plain as yesterday, though I have never written it down till now.

"Yes, he's my son, and he's made quite a name for himself." Long pause and meditation. Speaking slowly and with a great deal of repetition and a country manner, but slowly and with a great deal of repetition and a country manner, but much earnestness: "They are talking about making him president. They don't want to make him president. He's no man for president. He'd be no good in that place, A soldier is what he's fit for. He ain't good for anything else but a soldier. Why! I've had to set him up in business more than once. He was never any good in business. He's just a soldier; he's good at that. No, he ain't the man for president. He wouldn't make a good one."

Was in Texas. He was a farmer who prospered and a man of excellent habits. He possessed a kind and sympathetic disposition, and was honored several times by his fellow townsmen with offices of trust. He was born in the house where he died, and his death marks the passing of a man who was highly respected. He was an attendant at the South Congregational church.
